Hands-on work

Before moving into leadership, I learned every role hands-on: page design, art direction, illustration, front-end code, photo editing. That provided an important understanding of what's possible technically, what reads for an audience, and where design amplifies a story versus overwhelms it.

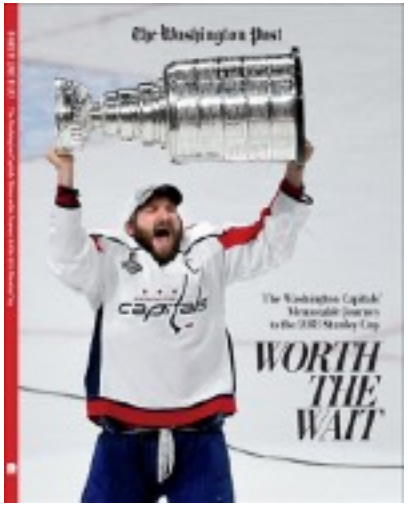

Designed high-profile special sections and daily content during the Post's foundational digital transformation.

Contributed to early interactive formats and template standards.

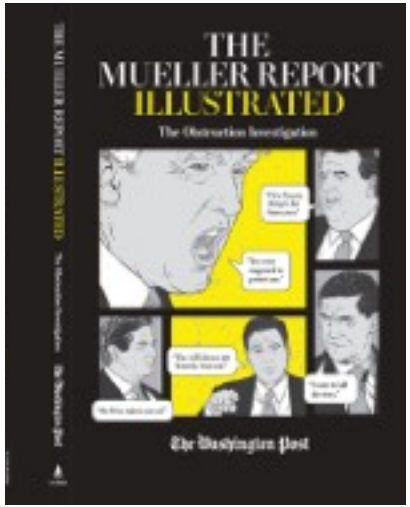

Conceived, project managed and edited visual stories of all sizes, from breaking news to medium and long-term enterprise.

- Took on more leadership responsibility while raising the bar for creativity and experimentation.
- Gained fluency in the tools and daily creative
