On interactivity

"When a reader makes a choice — even something small, like flipping a card or picking an answer — they've made a little investment. That investment changes how information lands. You're not being told a fact; you're discovering it."

"Participation creates a small emotional stake that passive reading rarely does, and it allows the reader to be in control of what they're learning."

“I’ve always appreciated how much care and craft the Post brought to visual journalism – especially in moments where speed and clarity had to coexist. That kind of work often feels invisible when done well, but it shapes how journalism is experienced every day.”
